I imagine that people with all disabilities will be able to participate in music. I imagine in the future people that want to sing but have no voice will be able to sing somehow. Scientists will look in their body to see what is wrong with their vocal chords. They would remove parts of the vocal chords and put in little robots to make them able to sing. People that are quadriplegic will be able to play instruments. The chords would be played from their eyes. They would look into a computer and it would read the notes that want to be played. Another way could be that there would be cords from the back of their heads to the instruments. I imagine that there will be better technology so there would be better sound. I imagine that there will be music all around the world that people will be able to hear. I imagine that all people will be able to enjoy music the way I do. What do you imagine?
